The Administrative Organization of Graduate Studies at UBC Okanagan

Joint Report to the Okanagan Senate from the Nominating and Academic Policy Committees
9 September 2009

Background on the Graduate Studies at UBC Okanagan

The development and delivery of graduate programs were new activities to UBC Okanagan when it opened in 2005, given Okanagan University College's previous focus on undergraduate teaching. As often happened during the planning phase, transition teams took the initiative to imagine doing things differently – where it made sense – at UBC Okanagan. Creating a College of Graduate Studies (CoGS) was seen as the optimal arrangement at the time. The “college” nomenclature evoked a collaborative and interdisciplinary approach to graduate programming while leaving behind any statutory or conceptual complications associated with the “faculty” construct. The current CoGS was established by the Interim Academic Governing Body and the Board of Governors and began operations with the rest of the campus in 2005.

Questions about Division of Responsibility and Authority

While much progress in establishing and offering graduate programs was made in a very short time, some conflicts soon arose between the faculties and CoGS. Under s. 40 of the University Act, RSBC 1996, c. 468, certain powers and duties are assigned to faculties. Because colleges are not defined in the Act, a college has only the powers and duties assigned to it by the University. A faculty may choose to delegate some of its statutory powers to a college, or it may choose to retain those powers itself. Some faculties reached agreement on arrangements for shared responsibility very quickly, while other faculties determined that they preferred to retain some faculty powers. CoGS quickly found itself in an inconsistent and often impractical situation.

It bears noting here that, had UBC Okanagan established a Faculty of Graduate Studies in the first instance, only some of the ambiguity would have been resolved. Rather than asking whether the College ought to have any of the powers of a faculty (because a faculty is automatically granted powers under the Act), the question would have become how to divide those powers between the graduate studies unit and the disciplinary faculties.

CoGS External Review

In late 2007, the Provost established a UBC Okanagan internal task force to review the College of Graduate Studies. Given the difficulty the task force was having coming to a resolution, the Provost initiated an external review of CoGS that was conducted in April 2008. External reviewers were Dr. Mark Dale, then the Dean of Graduate Studies & Research at the University of Alberta, and Dr. Carolyn Watters, Dean of the Faculty of Graduate Studies at Dalhousie University. In the external review report, the reviewers noticed a lack of parallelism between the Vancouver campus (with its Faculty of Graduate Studies) and UBC Okanagan (with its CoGS) and noted that the term “College” carried “...a number of implications that may work against the unit.” The report also identified several sources of tension, including a lack of clarity about the authority and responsibility of the graduate studies unit relative to that of the faculties. It was recommended that UBC Okanagan, through its Senate, unambiguously define (among other things) the authority of the graduate studies unit at UBC Okanagan. Reviewers also recommended that the College be converted to a faculty.

In October 2008, the internal task force was asked to respond to the recommendations proposed by external reviewers. The Provost thereafter forwarded the recommendations of the task force to the Deputy Vice-Chancellor. A majority of the task force supported the recommendation that CoGS be recast as a faculty and recommended that a committee of the Senate guide the transformation of the College. At the time, the Provost envisioned a special or ad hoc committee to undertake this work. After further discussion at the October 8, 2008 meeting of the Senate, it was determined that the Academic Policy Committee was best placed under its terms of reference to accept this task. The Committee was asked to report back to the Senate with its own recommendations prior to the May 2009 meeting of the Senate.

Between October 2008 and May 2009, the Academic Policy Committee reported to the Senate a total of five times (see the Minutes of Senate, November, December 2008; January, March, April 2009) and the Senate has granted several extensions to the Academic Policy Committee’s reporting deadline on this complex and important matter. Senate requested that the Academic Policy Committee deliver a final report on this matter, including motions for consideration as necessary, not later than November 2009.

Academic Policy Committee Process

Early in its deliberations, the Academic Policy Committee took the decision to temporarily set aside the question of an appropriate name and unit classification for graduate studies. The Committee was mindful of the fact that both an external review of CoGS and the majority of the UBC Okanagan task force had recommended that the unit be reclassified as a faculty, but decided to approach the issue from a structural perspective.

Accordingly, the Committee decided to develop a list of the functions required throughout the life cycle of graduate programs and student enrolment in those programs and to determine where each function ought to reside at UBC Okanagan. The list of functions has evolved through discussion into the “Areas of Responsibility” table that appears later in this report.

Prime Objectives

Based on the principles articulated in the University’s Academic Plan (see http://web.ubc.ca/okanagan/dvc/\_shared/assets/academic-plan956.pdf), the Committee recommends that any administrative structure for graduate programming at UBC Okanagan meet the following objectives:

1. Responds to the needs of students and ensures high quality learning outcomes as a primary driver;
2. Seeks efficiencies and eliminates redundancies;

3. Places areas of responsibility and authority where they are best positioned;
4. Adheres to existing policies and procedures that are UBC system-wide (e.g., Board policies, collective agreements, etc.);
5. Minimizes potential for conflict among various administrative offices across campus; and
6. Is easy to understand and negotiate.

Basic Structure: A Shared Responsibility Model

As the Committee considered the list of functions, a shared responsibility model emerged as opposed to placing exclusive responsibility for the identified functions / tasks with Graduate Studies or existing faculties. This model divided functions into two main categories:

- 1) administrative, service, and oversight functions; and
- 2) purely academic, learning, and research functions.

The Committee envisioned these two categories as being associated with Graduate Studies and existing faculties, respectively. It was important that neither entity should be allowed to dominate the administrative relationship, but each should have control over its functions as defined within the overall mandate.

Infused throughout are issues of financial and human resources that are essential for supporting these functions, but these were considered secondary to the extent that no policies or rules are violated. An essential component of the shared responsibility model is that there be mutual accountability where appropriate, and well-defined mechanisms for conflict resolution.

In some cases, an area of responsibility will clearly reside in one entity or another, whereas in other areas of responsibility there will need to be clear communication (at a minimum) and effective collaboration to ensure robust outcomes, in keeping with the objectives listed above that derived from Senate's mandate over academic issues.

Decision Point #1

Motion:

That the Senate approves and recommends to the faculties that they approve the assignment of areas of responsibility for graduate students and graduate programs as listed above;

That upon approval of the faculties, the deans and Provost redistribute responsibilities for graduate students and graduate programs accordingly; and

That the Provost provide a status report to the Senate not later than the January 2010 Senate meeting on the implementation of this report.

Recommended Graduate Studies Unit Classification

As in many previous discussions about graduate studies, the “name” of the unit is not the pivotal issue, but the classification of unit within the academic-administrative organization of the campus and the University. It soon became clear from a functional perspective that there was a need for institutional consistency and fundamental standards and this, of necessity, required the centralization of common activities. At the same time, it was recognized that there would be a variety of different factors shaping graduate programs and practices that emanated from the disciplines within faculties. It was, moreover, recognized that under the University Act, those who actually delivered graduate programs were positioned within the faculties of the University.

A Reorganized College of Graduate Studies

After having reflected on the various possibilities – faculty, college, school, and office among them – the Committee is of the opinion that retaining the classification of a College of Graduate Studies would both support the achievement of the above-mentioned objectives and reflect the division of responsibilities as imagined in the above table. The College should continue to be administered by a dean.

Conflict Resolution Mechanisms

By clarifying that students and academic programs reside within faculties, the Senate could resolve many of the conflicts generated by jurisdictional overlap. This clarification would not, however, eliminate altogether the possibility of conflict in areas of common interest and shared responsibility. The identification of mechanisms for conflict resolution remains critical for the success of any graduate studies unit. Initially, the Provost would attempt to resolve such conflicts, guided by the table above and by policies approved by Senate; where a resolution is not attainable through this mechanism, the issue will be directed to the Graduate Council for ultimate decision by Senate as a whole.

Rationale for Retaining a College of Graduate Studies Rather than Creating a Faculty:

- Faculties have powers and duties as outlined in section 40 of the University Act. In the history of UBC Okanagan, limited power has been delegated from the faculties to the College of Graduate Studies. This is not the case in Vancouver where there is a Faculty of Graduate Studies that shares responsibilities with the disciplinary faculties which often results in disagreements over who has responsibility for what. At this point, there are faculties that do not wish to transfer their powers to another agency making the establishment of a faculty of graduate studies problematical.
- Faculty members would be appointed to only one faculty rather than having an appointment or membership in two separate faculties, which would be the case if a Faculty of Graduate Studies were established. This could conflict with the spirit of the collective agreement since graduate students are often an integral part of research program;
- The proposed model ought to reduce conflict by avoiding colliding powers residing in faculties and in Graduate studies, which has occurred at several other universities with the formation of a Faculty of Graduate Studies.
- The external reviewers' recommendation to create a Faculty of Graduate Studies to parallel the structure at UBC Vancouver was not seen as a compelling rationale. It does not resolve the issues of how to determine who performs what functions, nor does it articulate a conflict resolution process that ultimately includes Senate.
- Although a number of institutions have a Faculty of Graduate Studies, the proposed Graduate Studies model is also a fairly common arrangement across Canada.

Interdisciplinary Graduate Studies (IGS)

There has been understandable reluctance in the past to locate an interdisciplinary program within a single faculty, as this would seem to defeat its purpose. Members felt that interdisciplinarity, however, is rooted in the academic approach to a student's program of study rather than in the administrative organization of the campus. The Committee is also of the opinion that all degree programs, including graduate degree programs, ought to reside within faculties. Since asking more than one faculty to serve as an IGS student's "home" risks confusion and jurisdictional conflicts of exactly the type that generated the entire graduate studies discussion, the Committee recommends that each IGS student be assigned a single academic home in the faculty of the student's primary supervisor. IGS students, like all graduate students would benefit from the centralized support services. It is recommended that an Office of Interdisciplinary Graduate Studies be created. The Office would be headed by a Director holding a faculty appointment and who would have line reporting directly to the Provost. The Office would promote, coordinate, and administer the IGS programs on behalf of the faculties and in coordination with the College for Graduate Studies.

To formalize the IGS program, the Committee recommends that the necessary graduate degrees in Interdisciplinary Studies (i.e., MA, MFA, MSc, and PhD as appropriate) be established in each faculty participating.

Decision Point #2

---

Motion:

That the Senate direct the Provost to establish an Office of Interdisciplinary Graduate Studies within the Office of the Provost as described above; and

That each faculty planning to offer a degree or degrees in Interdisciplinary Studies move to have such degrees created within their faculty.

Academic Oversight of Graduate Studies

---

Senate Establishment of a Graduate Council

The Committee also recommends that the Okanagan Senate establish a standing committee, called the Graduate Council, to consider matters related to graduate students and graduate programs. Operating similarly to a Faculty Council within a Faculty, the Graduate Council would consider proposals related to graduate students and graduate programs and make recommendations to the Senate through the normal approval process.

Example: To modify a graduate program requirement, a Faculty would develop a proposal in consultation with the College of Graduate Studies and approve it through the normal Faculty approval process. The Faculty would then submit the proposal to the Graduate Council for approval and submission to the Senate Curriculum Committee.

Recommended Composition

Elected Members:

7 members of Senate, one of whom must be a graduate student

Ex officio Members:

Provost (voting), who shall be Chair

Admission & transfer policies for graduate students;

Program Enrolment targets for new and continuing graduate students;

Graduate curriculum matters, including the creation of new, changes to, or discontinuance of graduate degrees, programs, or courses, and any associated policies; and

Any other matters relating to graduate education at UBC Okanagan.

Decision Point #3

Motion:

That the Senate establish a Graduate Council with the composition and terms of reference recommended in this report; and that the body by that same name currently established in the College of Graduate Studies be discharged.

Structure of the Graduate Council

The proposed Graduate Council membership is based in part on the existing Senate committee model and on other graduate studies bodies from across Canada and the governing Council/Committees of the two academic colleges at UBC Vancouver.

The Council's composition is a mixture of elected senators, the faculty deans or their representatives, and a few ex officio administrators/officers. The number of senate members was selected to offset the seven non-decanal or decanally appointed ex-officio seats.

In terms of its operation, the Committee foresees this group having both a coordinating and communicating role between the faculties for all matters relating to graduate education at UBC Okanagan. Individual faculties will send their faculty-specific graduate programs through the Council and then onwards through the Senate approval system. This will work to ensure a reasonable degree of coordination between graduate endeavours while still allowing for the overall coordination of the University's curriculum, academic regulations, and admissions standards at the Senate level.

The relation between the IGS and the Graduate Council will be more complex. Because of the inherent cross-faculty nature of the IGS program, the Graduate Council will have a more directive role in changes to and the administration of Interdisciplinary Graduate Studies. The Committee expects that the Graduate Council will consider and make recommendations for any necessary changes to the IGS program to both the faculties and the Senate. While each faculty will retain the formal offering of their own IGS program, the Committee recommends that each of these programs be kept identical, and that if a faculty wishes to change the nature of IGS in their academic unit in a way that does not function with the overall framework or with the other faculties, that they instead create a new graduate degree that is more disciplinarily specific so that IGS can be preserved as a cross-campus program.
